

GBV response policy

How a disclosure of violence is received safely, the survivor-centred principles applied, and the rules for referral to specialised services.

1. Purpose

This policy sets out the foundation's approach to preventing gender-based violence (GBV) and to responding when a beneficiary discloses it.

2. Principles

- Safety — actions that could increase the risk to a person are not taken, even with their formal agreement.
- Confidentiality — information is not shared without explicit consent, except where there is a threat to life or where the law expressly requires it.
- Respect — the decision belongs to the person; the foundation does not press anyone to go to the police.
- Non-discrimination — the service is provided regardless of sex, age, status, orientation or the circumstances of the incident.

3. Responding to a disclosure

The specialist does not investigate and does not test the truth of what is said. The task is to listen, provide psychological support, and inform the person about the services available.

4. Referral

The foundation maintains a current list of services: medical care, shelters, legal aid, and the government hotline 1547. The list is reviewed quarterly.

5. Training

Every specialist who sees clients completes training on responding to GBV disclosures before working unsupervised.
